

TRANSFER MARKET 2021

The transfer market is the arena in which football players are available for transfer to clubs. The transfer market consists of a list of players available for transfer, and also the money moving between clubs as they contest to purchase and sell these players.

* TRANSFER LIST :

If a player is "put on the transfer list", the club which owns the player has indicated his availability. Other clubs are then able to approach the owning club to bid for the player in an attempt to sign him. Though clubs can approach other clubs to put in a bid for a player, they know that a player on the 'transfer list' can be purchased for a more reasonable price as the club are willing to sell the player.

* TRANSFER REQUEST :

Transfer request A player may make a "transfer request," to leave their club before the end of their contract. In this case, the player is publicly stating his desire to move, and encouraging other clubs to make an offer for him. Due to the public nature of transfer requests, they are often used by players to air their grievances, such as frustration over contract negotiations or a clash of personality with the manager. A player may remove their request if the source of unhappiness is resolved. The club can also reject a transfer request, effectively stating their intention to reject any offer for that player.

* BIDDING :

So once a player has been identified, the next step is the transfer (or loan) offer. Pretty straightforward, you'd think, but there is more than one way to start a transfer. The most obvious is for a buying club to submit a formal written offer for a player, seemingly by fax even in this day and age, which will then be considered by the selling club. But it is just as common for clubs to contact trusted agents to act on their behalf, either in finding an available player from another club, or finding a buyer for their own unwanted player. These agents act as intermediaries between the buyers and the sellers, and can set the wheels in motion for a deal that otherwise may not have been struck.

* NEGOTIATION :

For those of us in the media, transfer stories provide stock phrases, which are almost becoming cliches. "Preliminary talks," "advanced discussions", "talks ongoing", "personal terms", "showdown talks" - the list is growing. Such phrases evoke images of a group of people - players, agents, chairmen, managers - sat around a table sliding pieces of paper with figures on them to each other, to be greeted by a shake of the head and an 'add a nought on to that and come back, matey'. Again, the reality is very different. 'Negotiation' meetings are often brief, with an agent laying out a player's demands, and an official (usually the chief executive, the head of recruitment or the director of football) giving the club's side of things. Issues which arise during negotiations often relate to, of course, salary, bonuses and signing-on fees, as well as personal and social considerations. Players often leave the negotiations to their agents, and are kept abreast of the situation from afar. They usually meet with a manager before a deal goes through to discuss how he would fit in at his potential new club - and if they don't, then they're taking a huge risk - but in terms of sitting round a negotiating table discussing figures? Rarely.

* MEDICAL:

The final hurdles in a deal are the medical and, for some players, the work permit. Medicals at top-level clubs are stringent, carried out at the training ground - Liverpool also carry out tests on players at the Spire Hospital in Mossley Hill - and often well publicised through club's official media channels. But as time ticks away on deadline day clubs, naturally, have been known to take gambles. Liverpool, for example, signed Andy Carroll in January 2011 while the striker was sidelined with a thigh injury. Basically, if both club and player want a deal to go through, then it will.

* HERE WE GO :

And there you have it. The fee is agreed, the personal terms are agreed, the medical is done. All that remains is to lodge the signed and sealed, finalised paperwork with the League and , and to make sure you get the obligatory smiling photo of the player with his new manager, and his new club's shirt. Simple, eh.

TOP 5 TRANSFERS

1.Ibrahima Konate to Liverpool

Liverpool lost their English Premier League title to Manchester City last year due to serious injuries to their first choice center backs Virgil Van Dijk and Joe Gomez. It forced Klopp to deploy Jordan Henderson and Fabinho at the heart of defence while the likes of Rhys Williams and Nathaniel Phillips were also given a shot. The Reds have learned from their mistakes and added a strong defender to their squad in the form of Ibrahima Konate. The 22-year-old joins Liverpool for £36m from RB Leipzig ahead of next season. The French center-back is expected to strike up a solid defensive partnership with Van Dijk and play a vital role for the Reds as they battle Man City for the PL title next year.

2.Jadon Sancho to Manchester United

The Devils have been on a hunt for a right-winger over the last few years. They have finally managed to end their wait and acquire the services of former Manchester City star Jadon Sancho. The ex-Dortmund star has been amongst the brightest players in the English football setup. He has delivered consistent performances for the Bundesliga side last season and is expected to tear the Premier League apart. Ole Gunnar Solskjaer finished second in the league last season fellow neighbors and arch-rivals Manchester City. He will aim to break the final hurdle and emerge victorious in the Premier League 21-22 season.

3.Jack Grealish to Manchester City

Premier League champions Manchester City won the 20-21 Premier League season with great ease and comfort. Pep Guardiola's team cruised past their opponent's like bread through butter winning the league with a 12-point gap. However, they failed to replicate their form in Europe losing to English rivals Chelsea in the Champions League final.

4.Cristian Romero to Tottenham Hotspur

Cristian Romero joins Spurs after helping Atalanta end the Serie A campaign with a third-place finish. He was also a part of the Argentina squad that won the Copa America in July earlier. The 23-year-old was named the 'Best Defender' in Serie A last season. Set to don the number four shirt, Spurs boss Nuno Espirito Santo will be hoping to see him help the London outfit in developing a challenge for the league next season.

5.Romelu Lukaku to Chelsea

The Blues managed to squeeze into the final four of the Premier League last season. Despite signing Timo Werner from RB Leipzig, the London outfit visibly lacked a number 9 last season. Following the departure of Olivier Giroud and Tammy Abraham also likely on its way out, Chelsea has roped in Romelu Lukaku. The 28-year-old Belgium international has joined the Stamford Bridge outfit from Inter Milan. He was the Serie A outfit's star and played a vital cog in their league win last season. Heading into the upcoming campaign following a fantastic outing at Euro 2020, Thomas Tuchel will be hopeful of mounting a serious title challenge after adding the Belgian to his star-studded lineup.
